

A severe blizzard a few weeks later saw winds of between 60 and 90 miles an hour, and Dog Town was buried under 5 feet of snow.

Finally, in early July, the sun began to return.

As the ice floe continued to buckle, provisions were made for emergency evacuation of the ship. New kennel on the upper deck, and tensions mounted as the pressure around the Endurance continued to grind ice against it. Soon after, loud cracks were heard from the ice as pressure forced huge blocks up into the air, and the dogs were thrown back onto the ship.
